Dear Speaker Pelosi, Leader Schumer, Leader McCarthy and Leader McConnell:

On behalf of leading patient, provider, and public health organizations committed to ensuring access to COVID-19 tests, treatments and vaccines, thank you for your continued leadership in response to the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, particularly for your unwavering commitment to protecting patients and their access to essential public health response tools. For more than two years, strong, bipartisan Congressional and Administrative alignment has ensured that all Americans have had access to the critical tools necessary to combat the pandemic, regardless of insurance status. However, those efforts risk stalling, prompting us to write today to express our urgent concern around the exhaustion of funding for essential components of our nation's pandemic response.

As bipartisan negotiations continue around funding for essential pandemic programs, we urge Congress to act without delay and safeguard Americans' access to COVID-19 testing, treatments and vaccines, and prevent the further dismantling of critical elements of our public health response. This must include prioritizing protecting Americans' ability to access the critical diagnostics tools they need to fight the pandemic – regardless of insurance status – and replenishing the Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) COVID-19 Uninsured Relief Fund.

Without resources for the HRSA COVID-19 Uninsured Relief Fund, which supported critical testing, treatment and vaccinations for uninsured individuals throughout the pandemic, the most vulnerable members of our communities may be at risk for losing much-needed resources to prevent, diagnose and treat new COVID-19 infections.

The COVID-19 Uninsured Relief Fund originally was established by the Families First Coronavirus Response Act and has been replenished throughout the pandemic, most recently through the 2021 American Rescue Plan Act. This critical program has provided life-saving access to COVID-19 testing for uninsured individuals and ensured that all Americans could access testing, treatments and vaccinations when needed; however, HRSA, which administers the program, has been unable to process claims for testing and treatment since March 22 and stopped accepting claims for vaccinations on April 5.

The COVID-19 Uninsured Relief Fund ensures access to needed services without cost-sharing – as Congress has long promised – and without it, many of our nation’s most vulnerable communities may lose access to testing, treatments and vaccinations, placing themselves and others at risk of infection. What’s more, without assurances to replenish funding, providers across the country are left without recourse to handle the influx of demand from uninsured Americans, forcing them to make decisions about the long-term sustainability of providing COVID-19 tests and services.

As we continue into the next phase of the pandemic, we must preserve the public health tools that have proven to be effective and protect Americans’ access to the services they’ve relied on throughout this public health crisis. Broad access to pandemic-response tools without cost-sharing has been a cornerstone of our national strategy, and we must not prematurely roll-back these essential services. We must remain vigilant about a new national wave of infections and fortify response efforts that Americans have come to rely on. Replenishing the COVID-19 Uninsured Relief Fund is essential to upholding critical public health efforts and to fulfilling Congress’ promise to provide access to testing, treatment and vaccinations without cost-sharing.

Our organizations strongly urge Congress to support the Administration’s request to fund all aspects of our national pandemic response immediately and not prematurely dismantle these critical elements.

Sincerely,
